

THE ATTENTION RESET • SEVENTY TWO HOURS • PUT THIS ON THE FRIDGE

Four moves. Three days.

Not a detox and not a test of willpower. You are changing what reaches you, then watching what changes.

THE FOUR MOVES

01

Remove the color

Switch the display to grayscale. Turn it back on when work, maps, photos or accessibility genuinely need it.

☐

02

Control the feeds

Sign out of the few apps you open without deciding. Keep the tools you actually need.

☐

03

Silence the machine

Nonessential notifications off. Keep priority calls, medical alerts and anyone doing caregiving.

☐

04

Give the phone a home

One drawer or shelf when you walk in. If all evening is unrealistic, protect dinner or bedtime.

☐

WHAT THE SEVENTY TWO HOURS FEEL LIKE

Commonly reported. Yours will not match exactly.

HOURS 0 TO 6

The phantom reach

Your hand goes to the pocket with nothing behind it.

HOURS 6 TO 18

The boredom

The hard part. Small empty gaps feel worse than they should. It passes.

HOURS 18 TO 36

The settle

Reaching less. Tasks hold longer. Sleep gets easier.

HOURS 36 TO 72

The room gets bigger

You hear the second half of what someone says.

DAYS 4 TO 7 • WHAT YOUR HEAD WILL SAY

“I have proven I can handle it now.”

“Just one app. Not the bad ones.”

“Ten minutes is not the same thing.”

“It was a busy week. This is not a normal test.”

None of those are decisions. Hold the arrangement fourteen days before you change anything.

THE DAILY CHECK • NOTICE, DO NOT GRADE

One pass at the end of each day. No scoring.

	DAY 1	DAY 2	DAY 3
When did I reach without deciding?	☐	☐	☐
Where was it easier to stay present?	☐	☐	☐
Which boundary is worth keeping tomorrow?	☐	☐	☐

READ IT OUT LOUD ONCE

I do not trade presence for distraction.
My phone is a tool. I am not.

The part that feels pointless is the part that is working.